

THE ADVOCATE

PERIQUE TOBACCO

It would be interesting, were it possible, to know what proportion of people really care for poetry, and how the love of poetry came to them and grew in them—and where and when it stopped.

Modern poets whom we meet are apt to say that poetry is not real as art. Byron's Murray ceased to publish poetry in 1830, just when Tennyson and Browning were striking their premieres.

But it is also likely that many persons even now are attached to poetry, though they certainly do not buy contemporary verse. How did the passion come to them? How long did it stay? When did it pass away?

Next to Scott, with his "Lancelot and the Maiden," who is more reflective and tenderly sentimental, while the reflections were not in least to be despised.

not forget to state that after the juice has been placed in the press, a black juice flows out of the top which has a pleasant odor, not unlike freshly cooked prunes.

The largest leaves are laid upon the cottonade first, so that when rolled the leaves will serve as a covering of the cottonade presently to be described.

The smaller leaves are placed longitudinally upon the larger ones until three or four to four pounds are placed upon the piece of cottonade, the ends of which are turned inwardly.

The cottonade and contents are now rolled into a narrow, the ends of the cottonade are rolled out and a string tied to each end to prevent the cottonade from opening, and the whole wrapped in a clothesline, usually made of cotton.

The wrapping is performed in the primitive manner that characterizes the operation throughout. Use is made of a wheel and a rope; the end of the rope is made fast to the cottonade, passed over a post (driven into the ground), and the other end is made fast to the cottonade.

The amount of perique grown and cured has averaged, during the years preceding 1890, 19,000 car-loads of four pounds per annum.

Although one may not keep cool, it is one satisfaction to read how others manage it. There is the King of Siam, or Siam, as he is called, tobacco in one of his country palaces a wonderful pavilion.

Why? Because your blood is impure! Have you ever had mercury? If so, did you give yourself the needed attention at the time? Don't you know that as long as the mercury is in the system, you will feel the effects of it? We need not tell you that you require a blood medicine, to ensure freedom from the after effects.
